

COREL TO EXHIBIT FOR FIRST TIME AT BETT 2005

Corel to Demonstrate Value to Schools and Colleges at UK's Leading Education Show

London, UK – November 2004 – Corel, a leading technology company specialising in graphics and office productivity software, is pleased to announce that it will be exhibiting at BETT 2005 – the leading educational technology show being held from 12th-15th January 2005 at Olympia, London.

As well as displaying the WordPerfect®, CorelDRAW® and Painter™ products, Corel will be hosting hourly demonstrations of the products on the stand – W4 in the National Hall. Teachers are invited to come and visit the stand and be inspired by artist Fiona Hawthorne and students, who together will specifically demonstrate Painter IX being used as part of a 'live art workshop'. Corel will also encourage visitors to try the products for themselves and learn about how Corel's graphics and office productivity software can form an integral part of a School or Colleges ICT suite. Corel staff are also on-hand to illustrate why their products offer such exceptional value for money for the education sector and discuss special pricing options as well as other benefits.

"Corel is very excited to be exhibiting at the BETT show this year", says Amanda Bedborough, executive vice president of Corel. "We will not only be demonstrating our products at one of the most influential arenas for the education market but importantly will be highlighting our value to schools and colleges. We hope that having live classroom demonstrations on the stand, our products will provide inspiration to teachers in 2005".
